The Banner Says...

Scotland rolls out the welcome mat for summer

by Sean Cairney

As we finish off the July issue the summer solstice is taking place across Scotland. Those long days allow visitors to Scotland to take in so much as some regions of the country can experience up to 19 hours of day light per day.

The summer solstice occurs each year when one of the Earth's poles has its full tilt towards the sun, bringing the longest period of daylight in the Northern Hemisphere. Scotland has traditions dating back to the Stone Age during the summer solstice which included the use of fire to ward off evil spirits and bless crops and livestock.

An exciting summer of events

One thing that all summer certainly brings to Scotland are events and after the last couple of years of cancellations and Covid protocols it is fantastic to see Scotland is again ready to welcome people from across the world for an exciting summer of events. The return of Highland Games and music festivals has already begun across Scotland and from next month major events such as the Edinburgh Festival's, the World Pipe Band Championships and the Royal Edinburgh Military Tattoo are all making a very welcome comeback.

In addition, 2022 is Scotland's Year of Stories and events are taking place throughout the year celebrating the nations rich heritage of storytelling and the stories inspired by, written, or created in Scotland.

Please check our events page for just some of the great events taking place this summer not only in Scotland but across the Scottish ex-pat world. For those who can't get back to Scotland in 2022, next year will again be filled with some great events to take in on your visit.

Regardless of the time of year there is always something to enjoy in Scotland, just plan your wardrobe for all the weather Scotland can bring!

In this issue

Another major event returning this summer is Glasgow's PipingLive! There is no sound that shouts Scotland more than the bagpipes. This month it is great to have Finlay MacDonald the Artistic Director of Glasgow's International Piping Festival PipingLive! speak to us about the return of the world's largest piping festival. Finlay and his team at the National Piping Centre in Glasgow promote, teach and celebrate pipes and drums year-round. PipingLive! is a celebration of global bagpipe sounds from across the world. Next month will be the place to be if you are into pipes and drums with both PipingLive! and the World Pipe Band Championships returning to Glasgow after the pandemic.

The City of Edinburgh has recently unveiled the city's iconic Floral Clock. A sure sign of summer for the locals and visitors alike to enjoy and if you happen to be heading to the Scottish capital this summer and into early autumn, please do yourself a favour and check it out. The clock is the oldest floral clock in the world and is located in the heart of Edinburgh's tourist scene. I have been to the clock in summer before and been amazed by the many thousands of plants used to create the annual spectacle with this year's celebrating The Queen's Platinum Jubilee.

Rock art can be found around the world and often has been used by our ancestors to tell their story. Scotland happens to have thousands of these mysterious carvings dating back thousands of years. One of the areas which has those in abundance is Kilmartin Glen which has the greatest concentration of prehistoric carved stone surfaces to be found in Scotland.

Happy Birthday Scottish Banner!

This month also sees the Scottish Banner notch up another anniversary year and celebrate our 46th birthday. They say for dogs one year is like seven, well for small independent publications like ours one year must be at least a decade! As with so many businesses we have had some tough months recently and I did wonder how the Banner could continue through those pandemic days when we lost so much revenue.

I am so thankful to those who continued to buy their copy each and every month and our wonderful advertisers who stuck with us. Whilst we are not yet back to 'normal' and of course I realise, like so many, that actually a new normal may be what we have for some time. The support of the readers and advertisers has meant we march into our 46th year with a sense of hope and gratitude for the support. So please join me in celebrating another year, as it is an achievement, we have all contributed to, and here's to many more to come! 🍷

Are you attending any events in Scotland this year or planning on returning next year? Do you have any comments from the content in this month's edition? Share your story with us by email, post, social media or: #ScottishBanner, #TheBanner

The Scottish Banner is more reliant than ever on our readers helping us to provide you with our unique content by buying a copy of our publication, regardless of if by print or digital subscription or at a retail outlet. You may also make a donation to the Scottish Banner via our website.

We appreciate your support and hope you enjoy this edition.

Ottawa Platinum Jubilee celebrations

The downtown Ottawa Sparks Street came alive on May 21 and 22 to celebrate the Platinum Jubilee of Her Majesty The Queen and it was quite the party! Pipe Major Bethany Bisailion from the Sons of Scotland Pipe Band put together a show with dancers from the Katharine Robinson, Schiehallion and Stirling Highland Dance Schools, the Ottawa Branch of the Royal Scottish Country Dance Society, guest pipers from three cities, singers Kevin Offord, Ellen MacIsaac, and Johnny Vegas. There were jubilee cupcakes and a massed band march to celebrate National Tartan Day, and Ottawa Corgis of Ottawa represented The Queen's favourite dogs! It was a wonderful celebration, and one we will always remember!

Tartan Day

On July 1st Australians and New Zealanders with Scottish connections will celebrate our own Tartan Day. This date commemorates the day on 1st July 1782 that the monstrous 1746 Act of Proscription against the wearing of Highland Dress was repealed. This was largely due to the efforts of James Graham, 3rd Duke of Montrose, so let's all celebrate by donning our tartan and wear it with pride on 1st July.

As an ancient Scottish ex-pat, I would like to express my appreciation of the Scottish Banner which is my monthly antidote to yearning for my birthplace, sadly an impossible dream. So, thank you Sean and your team, long may the Scottish Banner continue to fly!

The Slate Islands

Just received May's Scottish Banner and what a delight to see the article on the Slate Islands. My paternal Great Grandparents came from Seil. They moved to Glasgow at the end of the 1800's. My Great Grandfather and his brother were the islands shoemakers and toolmakers, all the slate workers shoes were 'made to measure' to ensure comfort.

They moved to Oban Drive in Glasgow and Great Grandfather and his brother opened a shoemaking and repair shop in Maryhill Road. My mother and her siblings all had their shoes 'made to measure' when they were school children. When they passed away, they were taken back to Seil and buried in the Angel Hill Cemetery, which was the cemetery for Seil. They were the last of our family to do so.

Going back further in time my Grandmother owned the house where the men changed out of their kilts into trousers to cross to the mainland. Doing the reverse on return, the house still stands today facing The Bridge Over the Atlantic.

That is my family's connection to the Slate Islands. Thank you for a wonderful article.

The Last on Bell Rock

Thank you for such an interesting article in the June edition. I have seen this lighthouse on previous trips and actually have an interest in lighthouses in general. Reading about the last Principal Lighthouse Keeper of the Bell Rock Lighthouse I found both fascinating and nostalgic. We live in such a modern and automated world it is so interesting to read about a career that is now obsolete due to advances in our technology.

I love everything about Scotland and have visited many times before, and now feel ready to visit again in 2023. I also attend a variety of Highland Games here in California and enjoy the great friendship to be had and sharing my Scottish culture with pride to my friends who I bring along.

Thanks Scottish Banner for such an informative mix of news and stories every month, I would not be without it.

Culloden Battlefield

My husband and myself have visited Scotland twice, in 1987 and 2010. We stayed with my husband's brother and sister-in-law, John and Irene Bruce. We visited Culloden Battlefield both times and found it very spiritual, fascinating and very eerie. I could almost envisage the battle, the howls, yells, screams, the clash of swords and boom of canons in use on that fateful day in April 1645.

I myself would recommend anyone visiting Scotland at anytime to visit Culloden Moor and feel the experience. I thoroughly enjoyed it both times.

Pen pal wanted

My name is Shayne Hudson and I'm from Evans Head (but now living in Sydney), just up the road from Maclean at a small wee town in northern NSW. My mum Helen Hudson Donagher was born in a snow blizzard in Glasgow Scotland many years ago before she and the family came to Australia. I noticed when I visited Maclean the town that there are family clan names on the telegraph poles up that way including the Sinclair Clan and our family clan name. Do they still do the marches with bagpipes and the caber toss in Maclean?

I have bagpipes though unfortunately they were brought from off the internet and were set up on me as they came from Portugal instead of handmade bagpipes from Glasgow.

I would be interested in a Scottish pen pal and if they write to me then I can write back to say a happy hello just like old days and we could share stories and songs and poems and photos please.

Floral clock blooms in honour of HM The Queen's Platinum Jubilee

Work has finished to complete this year's design on the world's oldest Floral Clock in Edinburgh's West Princes Street Gardens. For 2022, the hugely popular landmark celebrates Her Majesty The Queen's Platinum Jubilee.

A team of five gardeners took just four weeks to plant over 35,000 flowers and plants used to create the clock, which will be in bloom until October. There are nine different plants included in this year's design such as Agaves, Echeveria, Sedums, Pyrethrum, Crassula, Kleenia, Antennaria, Geraniums and Begonias. To be ready for the recent Jubilee celebrations, the team at Inch Nursery brought the plants on earlier than previous years and the gardeners worked quickly to complete this in time.

They will be in full bloom throughout the summer. This year also marks 70 years since a cuckoo clock was added which still chimes every 15 minutes.

The oldest of its kind in the world

Edinburgh's Lord Provost Robert Aldridge said: "I am delighted to once again see the city's beautiful floral clock completed, and in perfect time for the Jubilee weekend. Each year the iconic clock marks special occasions and events in the heart of the Capital and this year it is a unique tribute coinciding with celebrations taking place around the country as the nation marks The Queen's 70-year reign. My thanks and congratulations to the dedicated and creative parks team who have put together the design that I'm sure will be enjoyed by everyone who passes by it this summer."

The Floral Clock was first created in 1903 by then Edinburgh Parks Superintendent, John McHattie, and is the oldest of its kind in the world. It initially operated with just an hour hand, with a minute hand added in 1904, followed by a cuckoo clock in 1952. Until 1972 the clock was operated mechanically and had to be wound daily.

Since 1946 it has been designed in honour of various organisations and individuals, including the Girl Guides Association, Robert Louis Stevenson and The Queen, for her Golden Jubilee. In the clock's centenary year in 2003 it won a Gold Medal at the RHS Chelsea Flower Show.

Floral Clock-Did you know?

- The clock was created in 1903 and is the oldest floral clock in the world.
- It is housed in the plinth of the Allan Ramsay Monument at the north-east corner of West Princes Street Gardens.
- Planting begins in May each year.
- Up to 40,000 plants are used in the design each year (compared to 13,000 in the 1930s; 25,000 in the 1950s).
- In 1946 the clock began celebrating a different event or anniversary each year.
- In 1952 a cuckoo clock was added and still chimes every 15 minutes.
- The clock began being operated electrically for the first time in 1973.
- The clock won a Gold Medal at the RHS Chelsea Flower Show in 2003.
- Clock circumference: 36 ft.
- Clock width: 11 ft 10 ins.
- Weight of large hand (when filled with plants): 80lbs.
- Weight of small hand (when filled with plants): 50lbs
- Floral clocks are now distributed worldwide and many were made in Edinburgh, where the idea originated.
- They can be found in India, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, South America, United States of America, Canada and many other European countries.

The Scottish Banner is pleased to be offering the Tartan of the Month series highlighting a variety of different, unique and colourful tartans from around the world which are registered with the Scottish Register of Tartans in Edinburgh. The Scottish Register of Tartans was established by an act of the Scottish Parliament in November 2008 and promotes and preserves information about historic and contemporary tartans from Scotland and throughout the world. Text and image use are courtesy of the Scottish Register of Tartans (SRT).

This tartan was created for anyone who calls themselves a Druid. The design incorporates colours intended to represent the three grades - Bard, Ovate & Druid - and five elements; earth, air, fire, water and spirit. The three yellow overchecks are intended to represent the three golden strands of Awen. This tartan (SRT Reference: 13478) was designed by Catherine Collison and registered in April, 2022.

SCOTSPEAK

Scotspeak is a selection of quotes which made headlines in Scotland last month on a variety of current Scottish affairs.

"I'm just so happy, I'm speechless. Back to back and twice is an amazing feeling."

28 year old Tom Stoltman from Invergordon in the Highlands said as he won his second World's Strongest Man title in a row in Sacramento, California. Stoltman was the first Scot to win the title in history last year and has again been crowned champion in 2022. Stoltman is only the 10th athlete to win the World Strongest Man title twice and first to achieve back to back titles since 2016.

"We are delighted to be able to reopen the interior of the castle once more after access restrictions were put in place for essential high masonry work. We know how keen visitors are to enjoy the castle, which is an iconic site and has featured in a wealth of productions, including most recently in Outlander. The castle and the surrounding village are a hugely popular destination, and we look forward to welcoming visitors back through the castle doors so they can enjoy this much-loved heritage attraction once again."

Stephen Duncan, Director of Marketing and Engagement at Historic Environment Scotland (HES) said that visitors are once again able to explore Doune Castle, which has featured in Monty Python and the Holy Grail, Game of Thrones and Outlander (Castle Leoch). Access restrictions were put in place temporarily at the 14th century castle last year as a precaution for essential high level masonry inspections, while HES, who manage the attraction, conducted a full survey of the site.

"Had we known in 2014 everything we know now about the path the UK would have taken then, I've got no doubt Scotland would have voted yes back then. The conclusion very clearly is that Scotland could be doing much better as an independent country... Nobody right now can look at the UK - the mess it's in currently and its prospects for the UK outside of the European Union surely and conclude anything other than that Scotland can do better as an independent country."

Scotland's First Minister Nicola Sturgeon said that the SNP led Scottish Government will push for a second referendum on independence from the United Kingdom by the end of 2023. In 2014 Scotland voted to remain in the UK by 55% yes to 45% no. Scottish voters later also voted in a majority to remain part of the European Union and not for Brexit.

"I burst out laughing when I opened the parcel, I couldn't believe it. We had a book returned to our Rosyth branch after 14 years recently, which we thought was amazing enough, but this was way beyond anything we've heard of. For a bit of fun, we worked out how much could have been due in fees and it comes to £2,847. It arrived with a lovely letter from the borrower's daughter who was able to give us a bit of detail."

Donna Dewar, of Dunfermline Carnegie Library and Galleries, said as a book which was due back in November 1948 was recently returned. Fife libraries have had an amnesty on late fees throughout the pandemic to encourage members to return books. The over seven-decade late copy of Stately Timber by Rupert Hughes will now go on display at the library.

"What a wonderful honour for Dunfermline to be granted city status and I'd like to pass on my congratulations to everyone involved in achieving this. It is fitting with its royal connections, rich heritage and historic role as Scotland's ancient capital that Dunfermline will once again take a prominent place in the country's world-famous offering.

This increased profile brings with it a wealth of opportunities, particularly for the city's tourism experiences. It will undoubtedly open up Dunfermline to new audiences, position it as a city break destination and ultimately bring more visitors to the area and the wider region."

Malcolm Roughead, VisitScotland Chief Executive, said as Dunfermline, Fife, is among a record number of locations to have won prestigious city status through a competition, as part of Her Majesty The Queen's Platinum Jubilee celebrations. Dunfermline, Scotland's eighth city, was only the only Scottish location and joined Bangor in Northern Ireland, Douglas on the Isle of Man, Stanley in the Falkland Islands, Wrexham in Wales and Colchester, Doncaster and Milton Keynes in England.

"V&A Dundee is delighted to welcome people from across the city and beyond to enjoy this fascinating free exhibition celebrating Dundee firm J. Valentine & Sons, which with the help of its workforce grew from a family business to become one of the most successful and innovative publishers of postcards in the world. Their story, told beautifully in the exhibition, weaves together many stories from design and social history through to personal memories and nostalgia for the past."

Leonie Bell, Director at V&A Dundee, said as a new free exhibition that tells the story of Scotland's most pioneering and successful commercial photographers best known for popularising the holiday postcard, opening at V&A Dundee. Founded in 1825 in Dundee, the family firm Valentines capitalised on rapid developments in photography, printing and tourism in the early 20th century to create a fascinating body of work and a vibrant industry, quickly becoming one of Dundee's largest employers. Sincerely, Valentines runs from 2 July until 8 January.

"I was staying at the bungalow at Edington Mains where Jim lived, his home farm, and I had to take the dog out for walks. I used to walk round the fields that were Jim's, that in those days were sheep fields but are now arable. I just started to think about him and his life and what an extraordinary experience it must have been to have been a sheep farmer in Berwickshire and then become a double world champion racing driver and win the Indy 500."

Writer and director Alex Watson said as she was inspired to write and produce a musical about Scottish racing car legend Jim Clark. Clark was raised in Scottish Borders on a farm and went on to win the Formula One world champion in 1963 and 1965 and won an incredible 25 grand prix races.

Lady MacGregor's Scotland

By: Lady Fiona MacGregor

Lady MacGregor of MacGregor – otherwise known as British writer and broadcaster Fiona Armstrong - works for ITV news and current affairs. Fiona's husband is the Chief of Clan Gregor, Sir Malcolm MacGregor of MacGregor. She is an active member of Clan Armstrong, so their lives are interwoven with all things tartan. The couple live in the Scottish Borderlands, although filming and writing takes Fiona all over Scotland.

Well, what a month it has been! Flags out; beacons lit; cakes cut; pipes playing, concerts galore - and thousands of celebrations being held up and down the land. Yes, Scotland has been very much a party place as we got together to mark seventy years of service by Her Majesty The Queen.

The monarch's Platinum Jubilee gave us not just a four-day holiday, welcome as that was. No, there was much more. After a dismal two years of sickness and lockdowns it offered the chance for communities to come together again: to break bread, have fun and celebrate what has been a remarkable reign.

Royal theme

Earlier in the year, from the Highlands to the Borderlands, thousands of Jubilee trees had been planted, with more planned for when autumn comes along, and now our Jubilee colours were turning from green to red, white and blue. Shop windows took on a 'royal' theme; post boxes found themselves decorated with crowns and knitted flags; schools held posh picnics; one of them unveiling its latest nature project – a haven for insects dubbed 'Bug-ingham Palace'.

Indeed, it was the youngsters who threw themselves into the scene; in the Scottish Borders guides and scouts re-enacting The Queen's coronation, complete with white dress, orb and sceptre – and a Duke of Edinburgh. Yet this occasion was something all ages could take part in. Army veterans with disabilities valiantly scaled Ben Nevis, our highest mountain, to light a beacon at the top. At Musselburgh racecourse, teams of corgis, the Queen's favourite breed of dog, ran relays, much to the delight of the watching crowd. In the seaside town of Kirkcudbright, two thousand people sat down to a massive street party.

During that Jubilee weekend we had a special royal visit. Princess Anne came to Edinburgh and cut a cake onboard a naval ship. She then went on to feed the penguins at the zoo – although I am told it was not with a slice of the sweet stuff.

Lord Lieutenant of Dumfries

For my part, it has been one of the busiest times. As Lord Lieutenant of Dumfries, I am The Queen's personal representative in this part of south-west Scotland, and during the week's celebrations I was lucky enough to be invited to attend a number of events.

At one care home I met senior citizens who could remember the dances and street parties they held when Her Majesty ascended the throne back in 1952. Those with short term memories might not be able to recall what they had done that morning, but they certainly knew who the Queen was. At a community centre we sat down to a traditional Jubilee tea, complete with cucumber sandwiches and dainty china cups. At a more rustic community bonfire on a local hill, we toasted the monarch with cider as the smoke drifted across the valley.

Yes, Scotland has been very much a party place as we got together to mark seventy years of service by Her Majesty The Queen.

Arriving at one primary school they all wore home-made paper crowns and when I arrived the cry went up 'It's The Queen!' No, I explained carefully to the class of young children. 'I am not The Queen. I am The Queen's personal representative.' Lines of blank faces looked back at me. The teacher took me to one side and explained that they couldn't understand what 'personal representative' was – so she had told them that it was The Queen's 'friend' who was coming to visit.

'So, I am not The Queen', I grandly announced. 'I am The Queen's friend'. They all began to cheer, and one wee boy shouted, 'well if you're her friend, what's her bedroom like then?!' It is perhaps presumptuous to declare myself a 'friend' of the monarch. Yet over the course of seventy years, that is what Her Majesty has become to many.

A reassuring figure

She is not a friend in the usual sense of the word. A person you ring up and go out to lunch with and confide in. But she is someone who has been a reassuring figure and voice in times of trouble. Someone who has been a constant in an often worryingly changing world. Someone we have been able to respect and rely on. Of course, not everyone likes the idea of a monarch and here in Scotland one recent poll showed that less than half the country supports the idea of the monarchy, with a third thinking that the end of The Queen's reign would be the right moment to create a republic.

We shall see. As the independence debate starts up again Scotland looks like it is going to be an interesting place over the next few years. Yes, watch this space. In the meantime, can I just say to our wise and dutiful monarch - thank you Ma'am.

Multiverse celebrates the Summer Solstice

The site features standing stones, a great avenue, huge mounds and the beautiful Sun Amphitheatre. Summer Solstice at the Multiverse held activities that gently enhance the experience of being in a place specifically designed to link us to the cosmos.

Events included music, outdoor theatre, tai chi and yoga sessions around various parts of the Multiverse – with a special performance from the top of the mounds that represent the Milky Way and Andromeda galaxies.

The idea was for visitors to have the time and space to mark the solstice in their own way, enjoying a site that many feel has a sense of spirituality akin to ancient henges and stone circles. It also represents the next stage in the emergence of the art installation, created by the late Charles Jencks, into an outdoor events and performance venue.

A cosmic landscape worthy of the ancients

Sharon Glendinning, Crawick Multiverse General Manager, said in the lead up to the event: “Crawick Multiverse was created by Charles Jencks to be ‘a cosmic landscape worthy of the ancients’ and is the perfect place to celebrate the solstice. The events and activities we have planned are intended to be engaging and fun, while bringing people closer to the tranquillity of the natural world around us, and the wider universe.”

Crawick is situated in the hills between Sanquhar and Kirkcubrecht, on the border of Dumfries and Galloway and Ayrshire. Crawick Multiverse is a spectacular land art installation created and inspired by Charles Jencks thinking about space, astronomy and cosmology.

It was a major land restoration project, transforming 55 acres of former open cast mining into an inspirational landscape, unique destination and visitor attraction.

Crawick Multiverse reflects both the ecology and geology of the region where it stands. It has many spectacular features for visitors to enjoy which include 2,000 boulders were used to create Crawick Multiverse, the Northpoint provides a 20-mile 360-degree panoramic view and the Sun Amphitheatre at the heart of the Multiverse and can hold approximately 3,500 spectators.

For more information on Crawick Multiverse see: www.crawickmultiverse.co.uk

Crawick Multiverse held a special sunrise-to-sunset summer solstice celebration – a chance to enjoy the longest day amidst a spectacular 55-acre environmental artwork inspired by the sun and stars.

Hebridean study to explore disease and genes link

People with at least two grandparents from the Hebrides in Scotland are being asked to take part in a major genetic study. The distinctive Hebridean gene pool could shed light on the causes of diseases such as stroke, diabetes, heart disease and cancer and, in time, potentially point to new treatments for the general population, researchers say. The genetic make-up of people from the islands – which previous research has shown to be different from the rest of Scotland – will allow researchers to investigate how variations in Hebridean DNA influence the health of locals.

The University of Edinburgh study, which is aiming to recruit 2,000 people, will not be limited to people living in the Inner or Outer Hebrides, but will also include people with Hebridean grandparents who live anywhere in the world.

Viking Genes study

Participants will be asked to complete an online questionnaire about their health and lifestyle and to return a saliva sample by post, which researchers will use for genetic analysis. Volunteers who live in the UK can choose to receive specific genetic information from their saliva sample. This information, provided in collaboration with the NHS, could help prevent future disease. The MRC-funded research builds on the work of the Viking Genes study, which has recruited over 8,000 volunteers with Orkney or Shetland ancestry.

Professor Jim Wilson, lead researcher and Chair of Human Genetics, University of Edinburgh, said: “Expanding the Viking Genes study will allow us to explore the unique genetic heritage of the Inner and Outer Hebrides. We will explore how the distinct gene pools influence the risk of disease today and investigate the Norse, Scottish and Irish components of ancestry in the different Hebridean isles.” The study also involves the University of Aberdeen and NHS Grampian Clinical Genetics doctors Professor Zosia Miedzobrodzka and Dr John Dean.

Golf greats to be honoured in St Andrews

The town of St Andrews and its ancient university will honour some of the world's best-loved golfers when The 150th Open returns to the Home of Golf in July. Jack Nicklaus, Lee Trevino, José María Olazábal, Catriona Matthew, Sir Bob Charles and Sandy Lyle will be honoured in a major public ceremony in the Younger Hall, North Street, St Andrews, on Tuesday 12 July at 1pm.

Jack Nicklaus is to be made an Honorary Citizen of St Andrews by The Royal Burgh of St Andrews Community Council, while Trevino, Olazábal, Matthew, Charles and Lyle will receive honorary degrees from the University of St Andrews in recognition of their achievements and outstanding service to the game of golf.

Dr Nicklaus, who is already an honorary graduate of the University of St Andrews, will be the first person to be made an Honorary Citizen of St Andrews (the equivalent of the Freedom of the City) since Bobby Jones was made a Freeman of St Andrews in a ceremony in the Younger Hall in 1958. He will be one of only three US citizens to have received this honour, the other being Benjamin Franklin in 1759.

Nicklaus has 18 Majors to his name and won The Open twice at St Andrews. He played his last Open in 2005 on the Old Course where, in the company of Tom Watson, he birdied the last hole in emotional scenes at the Home of Golf. Well-known St Andrews golfer John Devlin will give a speech of tribute to Jack on behalf of the town, and honorary citizenship will be bestowed in the form of a scroll presented by the Provost of the Royal Burgh of St Andrews Community Council.

Dr Nicklaus has said he is "deeply honoured" by the invitation from the townspeople of St Andrews and will give a short speech of acceptance from the stage in the Younger Hall. In the same ceremony, the University of St Andrews will present Honorary Degrees of Doctor of Laws to Lee Trevino, José María Olazábal, Catriona Matthew, Sir Bob Charles and Sandy Lyle. These golfers join an illustrious roll of St Andrews' honorary graduates which includes Arnold Palmer, Tom Watson, Seve Ballesteros, Peter Alliss, Sir Nick Faldo, Colin Montgomerie, Peter Thomson, Gary Player and Pádraig Harrington.

After the ceremony on 12 July, Dr Nicklaus and the new honorary graduates will take part in a public procession in the town expected to draw thousands of well-wishers.

TransPennine Express celebrates first service to call at Reston in more than 50 years

The Border Piper, Sandy Mutch, played as the service arrived for the first time in half a century.

Communities from East Berwickshire in the Scottish Borders were connected by rail for the first time in more than 50 years thanks to TransPennine Express (TPE). The first service took place in May from Edinburgh stopped at the newly constructed Reston Station, marking the first passenger service in the village since 1964. To mark the historic occasion, the first train to call at the new station was named 'St Abb's Head' after the picturesque Scottish National Trust reserve located just a few miles away.

Matthew Golton, Managing Director of TransPennine Express, who was among TPE customers on the first rail journey to Reston, said: "This is a landmark day for Reston – and for TPE – and we're delighted we've been able to work with our partners to help connect communities in the Scottish Borders. Our customers are at the heart of everything we do, and it was fantastic to see so many using our newly named 'St Abb's Head' Nova train this morning. We're excited to welcome the hundreds of future travellers who have already purchased advanced tickets and look forward to the part TPE will play in providing new leisure and commuting opportunities for the local community."

Transport Minister, Jenny Gilruth MSP, who travelled on one of the first TransPennine Express services from Edinburgh said: "Thanks to the Scottish Government's investment of £20 million, rail services are returning to Reston station. I am delighted to be celebrating the re-opening of Reston, connecting another part of the Scottish Borders to Scotland's rail network. For the first time since 1964 the people of Reston and Berwickshire will have rail connectivity. We know that reconnecting communities to rail isn't just about transport; it's opening up employment opportunities, it's driving investment & it's creating opportunity for future generations. This investment will change the lives of the people of Reston for the better."

The new services operate in each direction seven times per day between Edinburgh – Berwick-upon-Tweed (calling at Dunbar and Reston) and five times per day between Edinburgh - Newcastle (calling at Dunbar, Berwick-upon-Tweed, Alnmouth, Morpeth and Reston, with limited calls at Cramlington). Passenger volumes on these services grew by 50 per cent in the past four months as customers took advantage of the new connectivity.

Dunfermline granted City status by The Queen

Dunfermline is celebrating its new, official status as a city. The ancient capital has won its bid to have official status city, as part of the civic honours competition to celebrate The Queen's Platinum Jubilee in 2022. Provost of Fife Jim Leishman, said: "The official title of city will give Dunfermline the wider recognition that it deserves as one of the fastest-growing, urban areas in Scotland, offering all the amenities that any modern city could hope for. City status will help us grow economically and as a tourist destination and will have a positive impact on Dunfermline and the surroundings. Of course, the people of Dunfermline have always known that Dunfermline is a city, that's why we have the City Car Park, the City Hotel and City Cabs but it's great to finally get official recognition of this."

Dunfermline and St Andrews were both put forward to the competition, keen to see their heritage recognised and their historical status officially restored, and both bids were supported by Fife Council. Both towns were strong contenders, with Dunfermline a growing urban centre and historical capital of Scotland, and St Andrews known worldwide as the home of golf and Scotland's first university.

Provost Leishman continued: "I'd like to congratulate Dunfermline and say thank you to all those who put in so much effort with the bid to get Dunfermline recognised as a city. And commiserations to St Andrews and all those who pulled out all the stops to put forward an excellent submission. We look forward to being able to say 'officially' – Welcome to the City of Dunfermline!"

Plans for a long-distance walking route across Shetland

A feasibility study is underway into the creation of a long-distance walking route across Shetland, to attract more visitors to the islands and provide additional walking opportunities for local residents.

The Shetland Way would run from north to south along the spine of Shetland, linking the islands' considerable natural, cultural and community assets for social, economic and environmental benefit. The proposed route from Sumburgh Head in the south to Hermaness in the north could be used by tourists and locals alike, utilising 'visitor hubs' along its length, to divide it into daily walkable sections and give access to attractions, accommodation, facilities and shops.

The project is being developed by VisitScotland, Highlands and Islands Enterprise, Shetland Islands Council, NatureScot and Shetland Tourism Association. With funding provided by Highlands and Islands Enterprise, consultants Stantec have been appointed to undertake the feasibility study, having a long-established track-record in Shetland and an in-depth knowledge for designing active travel infrastructure across Scotland, the UK and Europe.

Steve Mathieson, VisitScotland Development Manager for Shetland, said: "The idea of creating a long-distance walking route for Shetland seems to make perfect sense, especially with the growth in interest in responsible tourism and eco-friendly outdoor activities plus the drive to help communities engage more with active travel initiatives. There are a number of iconic walking routes throughout Scotland which are highly popular with both visitors and locals and this study will help determine the possibility of creating the most northerly one in the UK."

Visit East Lothian launches new destination driving routes

Taking inspiration from over 40 miles of stunning coastline, an expanse of open countryside, rolling hills and fascinating stories, Visit East Lothian has re-developed three driving routes which cross the county. The routes encourage visitors and locals alike to explore 102 miles around East Lothian and discover scenic landscapes, uncover picturesque towns and villages, visit hidden gems and experience authentic Scotland.

With people looking for new ideas and places to go, these routes open up a world of new adventures and opportunities. The routes can be broken down into smaller sections which make for ideal cycling too. The Driving Routes provide a unique insight into the region's fascinating history and heritage and continue right up to date with modern East Lothian. There are three routes to choose from. Each has stopping points with interpretation boards which link to further information on things to see and do in the surrounding area via a QR code.

Neil Christison, Regional Director, VisitScotland said: "East Lothian is a fantastic place to visit and explore and with its breath-taking coastline, quaint villages and quality visitor attractions has something for everyone. These driving routes will encourage visitors to explore further, stay longer and discover the region all year round. The impact of tourism spreads far beyond the industry itself – it benefits our economy, our community and our wellbeing."

Breath-taking scenery

The Driving Routes take in some of Scotland's most breath-taking scenery and iconic landmarks including The Bass Rock, Tantallon Castle, Belhaven Bay and Concorde as well as less well-known treasures such as Preston Mill, St Mary's Church, Whitekirk and Gifford. The three themed trails follow an individual route between Bilsdean, close to Dunbar on the main A1 route into Scotland travelling from England and Musselburgh which links East Lothian to Edinburgh.

The Coastal Trail is perfect for exploring rugged cliffs, sandy beaches, wildlife spotting and historical attractions. The Saltire Trail follows a central route through the county and delves into Scotland's rich history, heritage and culture. East Lothian is birthplace of The Saltire, Scotland's national flag and the story of its creation is just one of many told on this trail. The Hillfoots Trail meanders through glorious countryside, heads up into the Lammermuir Hills, passes through traditional villages and takes in panoramic views. There is a network of EV charging points in East Lothian and parts of the routes are also suitable for cycling and walking.

Elaine Carmichael, Visit East Lothian said: "With the increase in the staycation market and the desire from locals to become 'hametown' tourists, we felt the time was right to give our car touring trails a new lease of life. The resulting Driving Routes are a great addition to the overall East Lothian product and experiences offer and we are sure they will appeal to many people who want to really soak up the essence of a place, slow down and make the most of their holiday or day out."

Merlin Fact & Fake

The Dark Age in Southern Scotland rarely merits more than a passing reference in our history books. Oxford History of Britain states that "the turbulent, fractured, schizophrenic history of the Celtic nations, comes out as little more than a myth, fit for the refuse heap of history!"

The time between the departure of the Romans and the arrival of St Columba was far from being "a myth". It was a dynamic and dramatic time in our history when the elements, which eventually formed Scotland, were beginning to come together. Emerging kingdoms and politics, international trade, Christianity and new peoples - the Angles of Northumbria and the Scots of Dalriada - were changing the face of northern Britain

This will be the subject of an international conference in Moffat on 7th September 2022 (postponed since 2020 because of Covid). It will bring together archaeologists, historians, philologists, topologists, literary scholars, geographers, geo-archaeologists, art experts and anthropologists in a multi-disciplinary meeting of minds.

The historic Merlin story

The 6th century AD is the background for the historic Merlin story, not as the wizard of legend but a man of learning – a free thinker who was suddenly subjected to horrors not so different to the present Russian invasion of Ukraine. His world was shattered in a bloodbath of pillage and genocide and his beliefs exterminated by the imposition of an alien Christian religious dogma. Suffering post-traumatic stress disorder, he took to the hills as an outlaw, surviving on what nature could provide until he was finally assassinated and buried on the banks of the weed.

Over the centuries that followed, history evolved into legend. His story was adapted, to champion new ideals and changing times. What is fact and what is fake? Where does story-telling and history connect? The conference will examine and debate the evidence. A programme of archaeological investigation starting in August in the Upper Tweed will explore the unknown. A hidden heritage is at last gradually being unearthed.

For an outline of the Conference programme see www.merlintrail.com. It is open to the public (£35 including buffet lunch) with a field trip to the excavation site the next day). Entry will only be available by advance booking.

When the Pipers Play

Celebrating the return of PipingLive!

The Scottish Banner speaks to Finlay MacDonald, Artistic Director of Piping Live! Glasgow International Festival of Piping

The world's biggest piping festival celebrates its return to the full in-person programme for the first time since 2019, offering a blended showcase of in-person gigs and online events, so both local and international audiences can enjoy the array of world-class performances. Finlay MacDonald, Artistic Director for Piping Live! took the time to speak to the Scottish Banner on the festival which annually attracts over 30,000 attendees to Glasgow.

Finlay you learned to play the pipes from your father and piping has been a huge part of your life. What is it about the instrument that you find so iconic and timeless?

FM: For me when I was younger it was simply the sound of the pipes that drew me. When I grew up my dad was a Pipe Major, and I was exposed to pipe bands from a very young age. That sound of standing by a pipe band is incredible, there is no recording that can capture what it is like to hear live pipes and drums. The visceral sound and the unique feeling you get when you hear those sounds, for me cannot be replaced. The pipes were so prevalent in my house, my father, sister and cousins all played, and it was very much in the family.

Piping Live! Is the world's biggest piping festival and returns to venues across Glasgow this August. Can you tell us about some of the highlights at this year's event?

FM: The highlight for me is getting PipingLive! back as an in-person event again. It has been a tough couple of years, but we have made things happen online and we are so grateful for everyone who has supported us through that and bought tickets for our online events. And while we still are doing an online element this year, which I think is still important in many ways as it keeps us connected to our digital supporters and those who cannot travel to Glasgow this year. Musically though getting people back is so important and obviously there is the atmosphere of a live crowd, there is nothing like it. Attendees can meet with friends, enjoy a drink and listen to live music, and for me that is a really big thing. Musically we have some great acts coming, our headline act is Rura a really great Scottish folk band and one thing that makes that special is the band actually formed about 12 years ago just to play at PipingLive!, at the time at the emerging talent stage and I was actually teaching the guys over at the Royal Conservatoire of Scotland here in Glasgow and I encouraged them to get together musically and we gave them their first gig.

Scotland is known the world over for bagpipes; however they truly are a global instrument. Can you tell us how does PipingLive! champion international piping performers and sounds?

FM: The pipes themselves have always been true to our core and it really is an international piping festival. We are lucky to travel around a bit and I am always on the lookout for different piping sounds in order to bring performers to Glasgow to showcase their sound. This year we have a great international element with pipers from Ireland, Estonia, Brittany, America, New Zealand and amazingly the first ever professional Iranian female piper Liana Sharifian.

PipingLive! includes a great initiative for young people called Pipe Idol. Can you tell us more and why you find it so important to engage with and celebrate the next generation of great pipers?

FM: It has been part of our festival since we started and it is a great way to encourage younger plays to get up on a stage in front of an international audience, which can be a bit daunting. We do it in a very supportive and encouraging way, it is not like the formal judging panel; some may be used to. We pick judges who are in Glasgow, so an international panel, and they are seated amongst the audience, and we very much encourage it as a performance rather than a competition. The contestants get to meet their peers from different countries and perform on the same stage as them, it really is a real positive thing for those taking part and gives them a platform and experience they otherwise may not have had before. When you give young musicians a platform like that, they generally go for it.

Piping Live! takes place at the same time the World Pipe Band Championships are also on in the city. For those that have yet to attend can you tell us just what the buzz in the city is like for pipe band fans?

FM: There is nothing like it, it really is piping heaven in Glasgow. If you are into piping or pipe bands, then Glasgow is the place to be in August. The music is one thing, that goes without saying, but there is also the social side to all this. Piping is a very friendly machine. At our festival we try to encourage a social side to the music where people can come together and meet each other from across the world, Glasgow itself really is alive with piping at this time and it is a great place to be.

Headline act Rura.

If you are into piping or pipe bands, then Glasgow is the place to be in August.

Glasgow is a UNESCO City of Music. How important do you feel it is to make sure the bagpipes are celebrated in Scotland's most musical city?

FM: Glasgow is a year-round music city and great music can be had all over. Music can find you in this city from the great live music scene in clubs and venues to the simple pub scene there is always so much on offer. We have not just PipingLive! and The World's here but great music events such as Celtic Connections which brings a great array of artists from across the globe. We are obviously passionate about showcasing and the celebrating the pipes and can think of nowhere better to do it than Glasgow.

The pandemic has been quite hard on pipe bands the world over, with practices and performances cancelled. How have you found the spirit, resilience, and comradery of the pipe band movement has helped players get through the isolation and tough times?

FM: It has been really tough for most bands, and some have found other ways to keep going like through online practices. It is so difficult to recreate the live sound of a band online when each member is Zooming in from a different address, but many bands have stuck with it and have also been creating new music during lockdown. For some bands they have used the time to develop new material and really been massively resilient and come out stronger. We recently had our first in person competition here in Scotland in Gourock and there was a real amazing atmosphere and people were in fact joyous to be able to play the pipes again.

And finally, Finlay what message do you have for anyone, regardless of age, interested in taking up the pipes or drums and joining a pipe band?

FM: Just do it! People in the pipe band movement are very welcoming and here at the National Piping Centre we teach people from the age of 8 to 80 and you are never too young or too old to learn. There is also all the added benefit of the experience that has been gained during the pandemic of online learning for those who are not near a pipe band. You can start off online for those that can't travel, and I know that online tuition works as I have seen students flourish through our online courses. Pipe bands really connect people and offers a huge range of opportunities and experiences that most would not have otherwise, like I said just do it!

Piping Live! Glasgow International Festival of Piping, will return to Glasgow from 6th – 14th August 2022. For details see: www.pipinglive.co.uk

Piping Live! celebrates a return to in-person events with jam-packed festival

Just some of the highlights on for PipingLive! 2022:

- The Pipe Major Alasdair Gillies Memorial Recital Challenge, Piping Live!'s flagship evening of solo piping, will make a welcome return this year. The competition will pit five top pipers against each other as they take to the stage to perform a medley of their favourite tunes. Annually a sell-out success, performances this year will come from Callum Beaumont, Finlay Johnston, Sarah Muir, Angus MacColl and Matt MacIsaac.
- The International Quartet Competition will feature six of the top Grade I pipe band quartets in the world, including the Simon Fraser University band and Shotts and Dykehead Caledonia. Each of the six bands from across the world will send four of their best pipers to compete in this head-to-head challenge.
- There will be performance from Allan MacDonald, alongside his hand-picked band of Iain MacFarlane, Finlay MacDonald and Ali Hutton with a guest appearance from Uilleann Piper Leonard Barry. This evening's entertainment, entitled We're a Case the Bunch of Us, will see Allan MacDonald present music from his collections The First Hundred and The Second Hundred. This will be a double header gig, with a performance from Biera, the up-and-coming all female group who bring together roaring Scottish tunes with stunning songs in Gaelic, Scots and English.
- A special performance will come from the for the National Youth Pipe Band of Scotland (NYPBS) to celebrate its 20th birthday at Glasgow's City Halls. The band will showcase 10 new compositions that have been written as part of their Emerging Composers project. The bespoke 'project band' will feature the 10 young composers themselves as well as NYPBS Pipers and Drummers alongside a host of leading traditional musicians.
- The nine-day festival will showcase several piping competitions including the highly esteemed Silver Chanter, which will make its return to Skye. The pioneering piping event, now in its 56th year, is the annual invitational Piobaireachd competition that was established by Dame Flora MacLeod, 28th Chief of MacLeod, in 1967 with the aim of encouraging more top pipers to compete at the Skye Gathering. The esteemed competition came under the stewardship of the National Piping Centre in 2018 but it will now make a welcome return to Skye's Sabhal Mòr Ostaig this August.
- The Masters Solo Piping Competition will take place at the National Piping Centre. This prestigious competition is the qualifying event for the Glenfiddich piping competition and will see the best soloists from across the world compete in Piobaireachd and Light Music.
- Piping Live! continues to host an eclectic mix of world-class performances and opening night will be no exception as the festival showcases a performance for the first time for an Avant Garde "Ceol Nua" or New Music piping night featuring USA's Blarvuster and Skye's Malin Makes Music.
- Piping Live!'s final day will feature 2 fantastic events with entertainment starting in the afternoon with the internationally renowned Gordon Duncan Memorial Competition. This unique event continues to celebrate Gordon's links to Scotland, Ireland and Brittany. One Scottish, Irish and Breton piper and in person for the first time, an international piper will each play sets of Scottish, Irish and Breton music and the overall winner will be the best player of all three musical styles.
- The closing concert will see no other than the legendary piper Fred Morrison Trio take to the National Piping Centre stage, alongside his trio. Paddy Keenan, one of the founding members of the Bothy Band, will close the 19th festival alongside Fred in unforgettable style.
- Day time events, which will primarily take place at the festival's iconic Street Café on McPhater Street, will include the 'Emerging Talent' stage where daily shows will be performed by up-and-coming trad music groups, including GLASTUR, the Ross Miller Trio, Falasgair and Fionnlagh with Gillie O'Flaherty and Eoghainn Beaton.
- The Pipe Idol Final will see four solo players aged 21 and under compete after winning their heat earlier in the week. The much-coveted prize is a set of Fred Morrison's Reel Pipes.
- Pipe bands from across the globe will perform on Buchanan Street from 12noon each day of the festival, including artists from Canada, USA and Argentina.
- Virtual audiences from around the world can enjoy around 40 hours of live stream content which is all included in one Livestream Festival Pass. Content that will be included in this online festival pass will include The Silver Chanter, The Masters Solo Piping Competition, The Allan MacDonald - We're a Case the Bunch of Us Concert, the Lowland & Borders Pipers' Society Showcase, The Pipe Idol Final, The Gordon Duncan Memorial Competition and the closing concert with Fred Morrison and Paddy Keenan. Several daytime events and the Learn at Live! workshops will also be streamed.

Armstrong was a well-known laird in the Borders area, and although a frequent marauder in England, he is not known to have attacked in Scotland. However, his wealth and power in a troublesome region brought the resentment of James V. Armstrong was tricked into attending a royal hunt only to be seized on his arrival. He faced the king, and volubly remonstrated with him that he had "asked grace at a graceless face". Legend has it that the trees at Carnlanrig, where Armstrong and his followers were hanged, withered, and none have grown there since. 1530

7 - John Knox became the first Protestant minister appointed in Edinburgh. 1559

7 - The novel Waverley, by Sir Walter Scott, was published. Waverley was Scott's first novel, and written mainly as a way of proving himself a superior literary talent to Byron. Although it was published anonymously as a safety net against its failure, it was an open secret who the author was. Scott needn't have worried: the book was a runaway success and Scott became regarded as the leading author in Europe. 1814

7 - The Antonine Wall, part of the ancient Roman limes, is designated as a World Heritage Site. Known to the Romans as Vallum Antonini, was a turf fortification on stone foundations, built by the Romans across what is now the Central Belt of Scotland, between the Firth of Forth and the Firth of Clyde. 2008

31 - French naval forces in support of the Catholic Mary Queen of Scots bombard St Andrews Castle and capture the Protestant rebels. These include Protestant John Knox, who is sent to become a galley-slave. 1547

31 - Cigarette advertising banned on television in Britain. 1965

The Thistle – Scotland’s national flower

By: Rheanna-Marie Hall,
The National Trust for Scotland (NTS)

The thistle is the flower of Scotland and one of its most recognisable symbols. Since King Alexander III, it has been Scotland’s national emblem. No-one is truly sure of how the thistle came to be Scotland’s national flower. A well-known story though attributes the thistle being chosen as the emblem of Scotland to the Battle of Largs (a coastal town in Ayrshire) in the 13th century. A Norse army journeyed to Scotland, intent on conquering the land. The legend has it that they left their ships under cover of night, and were planning to ambush the sleeping Scottish Clansmen. In order to be as quiet as possible, the Norsemen had removed their shoes. However as they crept across the countryside, one of them stepped onto a thorny thistle. His cry of pain roused the Scots, and the warriors rose up and defeated the invaders.

History

Silver coins in Scotland and later Britain have long featured a thistle, and the first coins to do so were as early as 1474, issued by King James III in Scotland. The most recent design to feature the thistle plant was the British 5p coin (which stopped being minted in 2008), which was impressed with ‘The Badge of Scotland, a thistle royally crowned’. In 1687 King James VII and II founded the Order of the Thistle. Its heraldic emblem was, of course, the thistle. Its full title is the Most Ancient and Most Noble Order of the Thistle, and it is an order of chivalry, the highest honour Scotland can bestow on an individual. The motto of the Order, Nemo me impune lacessit, ‘No one provokes me with impunity’, pairs well with the prickly thistle which cannot be picked without difficulty.

The symbol of the thistle can also be seen in combination with other national flowers and symbols. Below is a flag gifted to Falkland Palace in 1950, to mark the 300-year history of the Scots Guards. The emblem represents the Crown and the rank of Colonel, showing the Scottish thistle, English rose and Irish shamrock with the words Unita Fortior, ‘stronger in unity’. The military colours were presented to George VI when he was Colonel-in-Chief of the Scots Guards from 1932–7.

The thistle flower

Alpine blue sow thistle alongside melancholy thistle.

Different varieties of thistle can be seen at NTS countryside and garden properties across Scotland, such as Mar Lodge Estate National Nature Reserve.

At Mar Lodge Estate, where over 600 plant species have been recorded, since 2018 a rare plant conservation project has been underway for two species which are at risk of extinction in Scotland. One of these is the alpine blue sow thistle (Cicerbita alpina). At Mar Lodge it can be seen growing beside the more traditional-looking varieties of thistle, here a melancholy thistle, Cirsium heterophyllum.

Thistles can be found right across Scotland, from the Lowlands to the Highlands, and even on the islands! There are a number of different types which grow in the UK, and a variety of thistles can be found in the wild around Scotland, the most common being the spear thistle, the creeping thistle, and the marsh thistle. It is the native spear thistle, Cirsium vulgare, which is thought to have been used as the national emblem. They are abundant in Scotland, and the imagery on coins, flags and other symbols through history closely matches this particular variety.

There is another type of thistle known as the ‘Scotch thistle’ or cotton thistle, Onopordum acanthium, but this is non-native. It was likely introduced from Europe sometime before the 16th century, and is most abundant in the United States of America and Australia.

A popular symbol

The thistle is now well ingrained into the cultural identity of Scotland, and you can find it everywhere. Amongst other things, it is the logo of Scottish Rugby, adorns the crest of Scotland’s national football team, is a core component of the Police Scotland logo, and is a popular choice for any number of Scottish businesses. For visitors to Scotland, a keepsake decorated with a thistle flower is often a must-have!

Thistle plant extract can also be found in beauty products, particularly soaps and face creams, as in recent years it has been found to have anti-inflammatory properties and be a beneficial ingredient in skincare.

Did you know?

The Isle of Barra

- Barra (along with adjacent island of Vatersay) is the most southerly of the inhabited islands in the Outer Hebrides.
- The Isle of Barra is roughly 60 km² (23 sq mi) in area, 11 mi (18 km) long and 6 mi (10 km) wide.
- Barra has been the stronghold of Clan MacNeil, who have claimed to be descendants of Ireland’s King and warlord Niall of the Nine Hostages.
- The once fishing port of Castlebay is the today the main town on Barra. The town gets its name from where Kisimul Castle (also known as the Castle in the Sea), which sits on a small islet not far from shore.
- Of the near 1,300 island population, over half speak Gaelic.
- Barra airport is found on the North part of the island and Traigh Mhor is the beach where flights land. Barra is very unique as it has the only scheduled beach plane landings in the world. At high tide, the runway disappears beneath the waves.
- The original Whisky Galore film has made on Barra. Based on the novel by Sir Compton MacKenzie who adapted the true story of the S.S. Politician which sank off nearby Eriskay with its cargo of whisky in 1941. Compton Mackenzie is buried on Barra.
- From beautiful stunning beaches to a rugged landscape the island may be small but visitors can understand why the island is often dubbed “Barradise”.

IN THE SCOTTISH KITCHEN

Cheddar Soda Bread

Ingredients:

350g/12oz self-raising flour
1 tsp baking powder
100g/3½oz unsalted butter
50ml/2fl oz. milk
100g/3½oz cheddar, grated
6 sprigs fresh rosemary salt and freshly ground black pepper

Method:

Preheat the oven to 200C/400F/Gas 6. Place the flour, baking powder and butter into a food processor and blend together. Continue blending and add the milk and cheese. Mix until the mixture just starts to come together then stop. Remove the dough with floured hands and shape into a large flat round about 3cm/1in thick. Place onto a floured baking sheet and decorate with the rosemary sprigs. Slash a criss-cross over the centre of the dough and place into the oven to bake for 15 minutes, until risen, golden and cooked through. To serve, cut up the cheddar bread into eight pieces and place in a basket or bowl.

Highland Salad

Ingredients:

1 x 300g/10½oz. sirloin or fillet steak
salt and freshly ground black pepper
25ml/1fl oz. rapeseed oil
1 red chilli, finely chopped
1 tbsp. palm sugar
2 garlic cloves, sliced
2 tbsp. fresh coriander, plus extra for the salad
2 tbsp. fresh mint
1 tsp. fish sauce
1 tbsp. soy sauce
1 lime, juice and zest
1 round lettuce
50g/1¾oz. sugar-snap peas, halved
6 radishes, sliced

Method:

Preheat a barbecue or griddle pan to hot. Season the steak with lots of black pepper, drizzle with oil and place onto a hot barbecue or griddle pan for five minutes, turning half-way through. To make the dressing, put the chilli, palm sugar, garlic and a teaspoon of salt into a pestle and mortar. Grind for 1-2 minutes, then add the coriander and mint and grind for another minute. Mix in the fish sauce, soy sauce, lime juice and zest. Cut the lettuce into six wedges and place in a bowl. Top with the sugar-snap peas, radishes and a few coriander leaves. Pour the dressing over the salad and toss to coat. Slice the beef and lay it on top of the salad.

Highlander Soup

Ingredients:

2 cups dried lentils or peas
1.3kgs/3 lbs. ham or beef bone
½ cup diced celery
1 small onion, diced
1 cup cut carrots
2 tablespoons flour
2 teaspoons salt
¼ teaspoon pepper

Method:

Wash lentils or peas & soak overnight in cold water. Drain. Add the recipe water & bones. Heat to boiling. Simmer 2 hours. Add greens (celery) & carrots & simmer until lentils or peas are tender. Skim all fat from soup. Remove bones, cut off any meat, dice it, & return diced meat to the soup. Sauté onions, then add flour, salt and pepper. Mix well. Slowly add one cup hot soup stock to onion mixture, cook until thick & smooth & return thickened mixture to rest of hot soup.

Dundee Lamb Chops

Ingredients:

Four leg of lamb chops
75ml/2.5 fluid oz. or five tablespoons vinegar
Half teaspoon ground ginger
4 tablespoons marmalade
4 slices orange for garnish
60g/2 oz. or half stick butter
75ml/2½ fluid oz. water
Half teaspoon paprika
Salt and pepper

Method:

You will need a frying pan with a heavy base and a close-fitting lid. First, brown the chops in the butter. Sprinkle the ginger, paprika, salt and pepper over the chops and add water and vinegar. Place a generous tablespoon of marmalade on the top of each chop. Bring to a slow simmer and cook for 45 minutes on a very low heat. If required, add a little extra water. Serve with a twist of orange on top of the chops and with boiled potatoes and fresh vegetables.

Aberdeen butteries (Rowies)

Ingredients:

500g/1lb 2oz. strong plain flour, plus extra for dusting
1 x 7g sachet easy-blend dried yeast
1 tbsp. soft light brown sugar
1 tbsp. sea salt flakes
350ml/12¼fl oz. warm water vegetable oil, for greasing
275g/9¾oz. butter, plus extra to serve 100g/3½oz. lard
ready-made jam, to serve

Method:

In a large bowl, mix together the flour, yeast, sugar and salt until well combined. Make a well in the centre of the mixture, then gradually add the water in a thin stream, stirring well with a wooden spoon, until the mixture comes together as a dough (note: You may not need to use all of the water). Turn the dough out onto a lightly floured work surface and knead lightly for 8-10 minutes, or until smooth and elastic. Transfer the kneaded dough to a clean, greased bowl and cover with a greased sheet of cling film. Set aside in a warm place to rise (prove) for at least one hour, or until the dough has doubled in size. Meanwhile, in a separate bowl, cream together the butter and lard until well combined. Divide the mixture into four equal portions. When the dough has proved, turn it out onto a lightly floured surface and knead for a further 1-2 minutes. Roll out the dough into a 40cm x 20cm/16in x 8in rectangle, about 1cm/½in thick. Turn the dough around so that the shortest edge is facing you.

Spread one portion of the butter and lard mixture over the bottom two-thirds of the dough rectangle. Fold the remaining one third of the dough rectangle over onto the butter and lard mixture to cover the centre section of the dough rectangle. Fold the other end of the dough rectangle over the folded dough, so that the dough ends up three times its original thickness. Roll the dough out again to a 40cm x 20cm/16in x 8in rectangle, about 1cm/½in thick. Repeat the process of spreading and folding with another portion of the butter and lard mixture. Repeat the process twice more, until all of the butter and lard mixture has been used up and the dough has been rolled out a total of four times. Preheat the oven to 200C/400F/Gas 6. Roll the dough out again to a 40cm x 20cm/16in x 8in rectangle, about 1cm/½in thick. Cut the dough into 16 pieces and roll each into a round, flat bun shape. Transfer the buns to a lightly oiled baking tray and set aside for 40-45 minutes, or until they have doubled in size again (leave enough space between them for expansion). When the buns have risen, bake them in the oven for 15-18 minutes, or until they have risen further and are golden-brown and cooked through. Set aside to cool on a wire rack. Serve each buttery warm, spread with butter and jam.

Honey sponge

Ingredients:

130g/4½oz honey
100g/3½oz unsalted butter, softened, plus extra for greasing
100g/3½oz caster sugar
3 free-range eggs
110g/4oz self-raising flour
1 tsp baking powder
custard or cream, to serve

Method:

Butter a 1 litre/1¾ pint pudding basin. Put two tablespoons of the honey into the prepared basin (if the honey is very thick, warm it gently first to make it more liquid). Put the remaining honey and all the other ingredients into a large bowl and beat together using an electric whisk. Start off slowly, then increase the speed and mix for two minutes until all the ingredients are well combined.

Pour the mixture into the pudding basin, on top of the honey.

Place a piece of baking parchment on a sheet of foil and make a large pleat in the middle, folding both sheets together (this allows for the pudding's expansion as it cooks). Put the parchment and foil on top of the pudding, foil side up, and secure with string, looping the end of the string over the top of the pudding and tying it to form a handle that will enable you to lift the pudding in and out of the pan.

Place the basin in a large pan, and pour in enough boiling water to come halfway up the side of the basin. Put a lid on the pan and bring to a simmer. Lower the heat to maintain a simmer and let the pudding steam for 1¼ hours, until risen and springy to the touch. Top up the boiling water, if necessary, to prevent the pan boiling dry.

Remove the foil and parchment and run the tip of a small, sharp knife around the edge of the pudding to help release it. Turn onto a warmed plate and serve piping hot with custard or cream.

Glasgow punch

Ingredients:

1 large wedge fresh lime
50ml/2fl oz. aged rum
1 lemon, juiced and zested, mixed with 2 tsp. caster sugar
4 small chunks fresh pineapple
1 pinch fresh nutmeg

Method:

Place all the ingredients in a cocktail shaker with a handful of ice and shake hard.

Strain the cocktail into a small wine cup and garnish with a pinch of nutmeg and serve.

Fang-tastic! Scotland's link to Dracula

Slains Castle in Aberdeenshire is said to have inspired Dracula author Bram Stoker.

VisitScotland is celebrating Scotland's surprising links to Dracula and its famed author Bram Stoker on the iconic book's 125th anniversary. Scotland is said to have played a crucial role in the creation of the classic story with Stoker holidaying north of the border as he wrote it. Visitors and locals alike are being encouraged to indulge in some literary tourism, whereby people are inspired to visit the locations depicted in literature, and delve into the country's connections to Dracula, following in Stoker's footsteps.

Slains Castle

Locations in Edinburgh, the Scottish Borders and Glasgow all have links to Stoker, but it is perhaps the striking cliff top castle in Aberdeenshire that is best known for its links to the story. Slains Castle, near Cruden Bay, is believed to have inspired Dracula's castle – specifically a unique octagon-shaped room described in the book, which Slains boasts. Stoker began writing Dracula – which was published in 1897 – while staying at the nearby Kilmarnock Arms Hotel, with his signatures from its guestbook in 1894 and 1895 surviving to this day. Now in ruins, the castle is best admired from nearby and should not be entered due to safety reasons.

The 125th anniversary of Dracula is fittingly marked during Scotland's Year of Stories which celebrates and promotes the wealth of stories inspired by, written, or created in Scotland. Recently, the national tourism organisation co-hosted a special event with Blackwell's bookshop in Edinburgh to mark the anniversary attended by Stoker's great-grandnephew Dacre Stoker, who took part in a Q&A and book signing attended by fans of Dracula and horror literature.

Jenni Steele, VisitScotland Film and Creative Industries Manager, said: "This anniversary is a fantastic opportunity to highlight Scotland's connections to this world-renowned book and character. Dracula holds such a sense of intrigue and mystery, so it is not surprising that Bram Stoker's writing is said to have been influenced by the country's magical landscapes and locations while on his travels. It was pleasure to co-host the special event in Edinburgh and have Dacre involved in sharing his passion and knowledge about Dracula in Scotland. 2022 also marks Scotland's Year of Stories – so this anniversary is a perfect fit to celebrate our links to this world-famous tale. And we hope that by shining a light on those ties, people will come and see the inspirational places that arguably helped created one of the most famous pieces of literature ever written."

Scotland's literary tradition

Dacre Stoker, great grandnephew of Bram Stoker, said: "It is a great privilege to part of this special anniversary, and even more so to be celebrating it in what is arguably the birthplace of Dracula; Scotland. The rich culture and heritage clearly left its impact on Bram; from the ruins of Slains Castle clearly inspiring the gothic setting of Dracula's castle, to the vast landscape of Aberdeenshire's coast to his links to Edinburgh and the Scottish Borders, including his friendships with writers such as Arthur Conan Doyle and other writers that make up the fabric of Scotland's literary tradition. Scotland has inspired many writers and artists for centuries and its stories and landscapes hopefully will continue to inspire many more to come."

Scotland has world-class literary links. Our landscapes, history and people have inspired writers for centuries, helping to bring to life enduring characters that capture the imagination. From Dracula to Outlander, Harry Potter to Sunset Song, Scotland has inspired some of the world's best-loved literary creations. Pre-Covid19 there were over three million visits to literary attractions across Scotland (2013-2019). Figures released by the Moffat Centre for Travel and Tourism Business Development at Glasgow Caledonian University detail visitor numbers to places with literature links including Abbotsford – The Home of Sir Walter Scott, Robert Burns Birthplace Museum, the Grassie Gibbon Centre, the Writers' Museum, JM Barrie's Birthplace, Scott Monument and Burns Monument Centre.

And there are several Scottish locations with Dracula and vampire ties for visitors to discover:

Renfield Street, Glasgow – It is believed Bram Stoker supported the staging of plays at the Theatre Royal in Glasgow and that the name of RM Renfield, the character featured in the novel, was taken from Glasgow's Renfield Street.

Edinburgh - Before writing Dracula, Bram Stoker worked as a theatre manager, which saw him heavily involved in the opening night of the Royal Lyceum Theatre in Edinburgh in 1883.

Glamis Castle, Angus - There is said to be a 'vampire child' who was born in the castle and kept in a secret room.

Melrose Abbey, Scottish Borders.

Another vampire legend tells of a woman who worked in the castle and was caught drinking blood from a body and was punished by being walled up alive in a secret room, where she remains to this day.

Melrose Abbey, Scottish Borders – Reportedly, during the 12th century an unpopular priest lived at the abbey. He was a rule-breaker and nicknamed Hunderprest because he preferred hunting with dogs rather than serving God. After he died and was buried on the grounds, it's alleged Hunderprest rose from his tomb, wailing and drinking the blood of the nuns. One night, as the undead priest rose again, the other priests beheaded him, cremated him and scattered his ashes to the wind.

Blair Atholl, Perthshire - A local tale describes how two poachers were attacked by a blood sucking creature while they slept in a bothy near Glen Tilt. The pair fought the creature off after which it flew away into the night or accounts claim it simply vanished.

Another interesting Dracula connection is through Emily Gerard, an author born in Jedburgh, Scottish Borders and lived in Airdrie, North Lanarkshire. She was the first person to bring the word "nosferatu" or "vampire" into use in western Europe. She studied and wrote about Transylvanian folklore having married an Austro-Hungarian chevalier, who was stationed in a small town there. Gerard's collection of Transylvanian myths and legends are known to have influenced Stoker's Dracula.

Canmore Highland Games -How to savour your inner Scot

September 3-4, 2022 brings back the full experience of Celtic culture at Centennial Park in Canmore – so you'll want to witness the colours of the tartans and the thrill of the pipes at the 31st Annual Canmore Highland Games. Here's how you can awaken your inner Scot with some big fun – the Taste of the Highlands, the Canmore Highland Games and the Canmore Ceilidh, beneath the scenic peaks of the Rockies on Labour Day weekend.

Taste of the Highlands, Sat Sept 3, 5 to 9 pm: Enjoy an evening of wines and whiskies, meads and ale with local and international beverages and brews from some of the world's most celebrated producers. The Celtic lounge atmosphere features experts available to share their knowledge as you sip your way from booth to booth. Appetizers served up by some of Canmore's finest restaurants.

Bring the whole family for the Highland Games

The Highland Games, Sun Sept 4, 8 am to 5pm: Bring the whole family for the Highland Games - visit the clans, see the heavy sports, shop the Celtic market, watch the sheepdogs at work, observe the intense competitions of highland dancing and piping and drumming, enliven your palate with a Scotch tasting, sample the foods available, quench your thirst while enjoying live Celtic music in the beer garden, and discover the British automobiles on show.

The Canmore Ceilidh, Sun Sept 4, 6 to 11 pm: Let loose and expose your inner Scot at the Canmore Ceilidh – while celebrating kitchen-party style. Headliners this year are The Mudmen. Always entertaining and definitely unique, The Mudmen are a blast of Celtic energy whose members are known to be characters both on and off the stage. The Mudmen are building a legion of fans from young to old with career highlights in national sporting events and at television appearances and festivals across the country. Irish and Highland Dancing and a guest pipe band round out the roster.

"The Highland Games has become a signature summer event in our small mountain town. Every year we entertain the attendees at the Games while showcasing the many facets of our culture in our community. The large number of visitors creates economic support and benefit for many local businesses," says Three Sisters Scottish Festival Society president, Sandy Bunch. Always an affordable event, there are advance tickets and bundles to choose from.

Tickets and event information can be found at: www.canmorehighlandgames.ca

A Pictish cross-slab has gone on display for the first time as part of an Orkney Museum exhibition exploring the archaeology of Newark, Deerness. Discovered in 2016, the carved stone is one element of an exhibition outlining a site with a history spanning millennia, but which is under constant threat from coastal erosion. The project has been drawing together the threads of the Newark story, based on past excavations, surveys and modern scientific analysis of the human remains. And what a remarkable story it is – of Bronze Age burials, of Picts, Vikings, Norse and the descendants of kings and Orkney's merchant lairds.

Newark is a complex multi-period site with around 4,000 years of activity. A Bronze Age burial is the earliest evidence so far with several suspected burial mounds also detected in a recent geophysical survey. In the Iron Age, two underground structures were built, one of which had human remains deposited within. The 8th century AD cross-slab may have marked the site of an early chapel, which was replaced by a stone-built church. Although used from around AD600 until 1400, most of the cemetery burials date to the Norse period. These are a source of much information and some are surrounded by shells carefully placed around the dead, something unknown from other contemporary cemeteries.

Newark eventually appears on maps as the site of a Late Medieval manor house owned by Lord Lindores, son-in-law of Robert Stewart, Earl of Orkney. Although some of the ground plan was uncovered during excavations in the 1960s, not enough was explored to fully establish its size and style. By the late 1790s, one of Orkney's leading merchant laird families, the Balfours, owned the dilapidated building. At some point after, it was demolished.

The Newark Project: the story so far runs at the Orkney Museum until October 29, 2022.

Patterns of the Past - Rock art in Kilmartin Glen and far beyond

By: David C Weinczok

In a 1971 article in the Proceedings of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, Ronald Morris makes a fascinating observation about how symbols change their form and meaning over time. The cross has been a symbol of Christianity for 2,000 years, but a red cross now means 'medical aid'; a white cross on a red background means 'Switzerland'; a Victoria Cross means 'bravery', and so on. Like crosses, cup-and-ring rock art has variations in form, context, and position – the precise meaning of each is simply unknown to us. A cup-and-ring mark on a south-facing slope may or may not have meant something different than a cup-and-ring mark etched onto a standing stone, which may or may not have meant something different than one removed from its original location and added to a later cairn, boundary fence, or domestic hearth.

almost wholly reconstructed following excavations in 1929. To enter the cairn – which, historically, was not intended to be entered – you must climb atop the pile of stones and go in through a metal hatch and ladder. The stone ledge in front of the ladder is adorned with a cup-and-ring motif likely carved at the time of reconstruction.

The 'original' cairn had no such marking, but now it does. The design was familiar to the cairn builders, but used here in a new way as an entrance marker. It's not strictly accurate to how cup-and-ring marks were once used, but it speaks to the spirit of the place in a way that makes visitors dwell on the connective themes of ancient Kilmartin. It was made by people a century ago, and now seen and stepped over by people today and photographed by smartphones. Each person who sees it decides for themselves how to interpret it, and it's this adaptability that makes the cup-and-ring design such a timeless symbol.

Back home in central Edinburgh following a week-long stay in Kilmartin Glen, a funny thing began happening. I started seeing cup-and-ring marks everywhere: in the vaguely concentric pattern on a coffee shop's napkins; on a fence cordoning off a building site adorned with the builders' ripple-like logo; and in the splashes made by raindrops in the pools forming in pockets along the street outside my flat. The universal simplicity of the design means it can manifest just about anywhere, far from any stone that bears them. They linger not just on smooth stone canvases, but in the mind. That, ultimately, is where the stuff that connects us all as humans dwells. So, wherever you may be in the world, look out for cup-and-ring marks – in the clouds, in the foam of your coffee milk, in the ethereal moments between sleep and wakefulness – and in doing so, become part of a more than 6,000-year-old tradition of motifs and imagination.

Motifs and symbols are some of the most enduring and intriguing remnants of the past for historians and archaeologists to study. Unlike structures, they can endure long after any individual site has been reduced to dust. Deciphering a motif's meaning keeps many such experts up at night, but there is more to it than just the 'how' or 'why'. Understanding and reinterpreting past symbols, I believe, brings us close to the essence of ancient lives precisely because we can't help but make them our own, just as past peoples would have.

Ring rock art

One of the most prevalent types of motifs in Scotland are variations on cup and cup-and-ring rock art. These simple designs consist of a 'cup' or bowl-like depression carved into a stone surface, sometimes surrounded by layers of 'rings'. These symbols pop up around the world. While they're most strongly associated with the north-west seaboard of Atlantic Europe, they can also be found in Scandinavia, Alpine valleys, and the Aegean Sea. Similar patterns of rock art, though with important distinctions, have been found in Australia, Central Asia, Hawaii, India, Mexico, and more.

More than 3,000 rock art sites, many of them bearing cup or cup-and-ring marks, are known in Scotland today. They were made between 4,000 – 2,500 BCE, and re-used in various ways well into the Bronze and Iron Ages (and, as we'll see soon, much more recently). There are several especially dense clusters, including around Loch Tay, but no historic landscape quite brings them to life like Kilmartin Glen in Mid-Argyll. Specific locations of note in the area include Achnabreac (also spelled Achnabreck), Ormaig, and Kilmichael Glassary.

Recent research by Scotland's Rock Art Project (ScRAP) has shed light on the relationship of rock art to the wider landscape. Most rock art sites are located on gentle slopes facing south, ensuring greater sun coverage and coinciding with areas most favourable for prehistoric settlement and agriculture. As in Kilmartin, many instances of rock art are not visible from far away. In fact, they are often found away from obvious paths, suggesting that they were not intended to be landmarks or obvious statements of power but were perhaps more intimate, with only those in the local community or those bearing special knowledge knowing their location.

A handshake between tiers of the cosmos

Creating cup-and-ring marks was laborious, but not as intensively as you might think. Experimental archaeology has shown that a simple cup-and-ring design can be made on the surface of softer rocks like sandstone using stone and bone tools in thirty to ninety minutes. Softer stones don't last as long against the forces of erosion, however, so most examples of rock art found in Scotland today are 'pecked' into harder rocks like schist. Pecking marks on tougher rocks takes longer, but a single cup-and-ring mark can still be made within a single day. The act of creating rock art was likely itself ceremonial, an event meant to create a common memory and spectacle for the community. While standing around listening to the repeated tap-tap-tapping of someone pecking a design into stone might not sound like thrilling entertainment to us today, a greater appreciation can be gained for such communal events by considering prehistoric cosmology.

A common way of perceiving existence in prehistoric societies the world over was as a three-tiered universe: the realm above (sky), the realm here (earth), and the realm below (netherworld). Within this cosmology, certain stones, metals, and minerals like quartz were considered 'alive' in the sense that they were believed to have come from one tier into another, ours. In this way, pecking designs into stones can be understood an interaction with another realm. The rhythmic sounds produced are not so different from shamanic chanting or drumbeats. The morphing of the raw material of stone, and even things like the bright green colour produced fleetingly by striking quartz, were expressions of that relationship – a handshake between tiers of the cosmos.

Motifs and symbols are some of the most enduring and intriguing remnants of the past for historians and archaeologists to study.

Timeless symbol

In Kilmartin Glen, something I found fascinating is how the modern community has clearly embraced the motifs. They are seen everywhere from children's drawings in chalk to decorations in windows to signposts for local companies on roadsides. Symbols first created up to 6,000 years ago are still being created, displayed, and innovated upon – isn't that extraordinary? One particular example of this stands out. The focal point of Kilmartin Glen is the 'Linear Cemetery', a series of burial cairns laid out in a line across the floor of the glen. One of these cairns, Nether Largie Mid Cairn, was border of the Roman empire. In AD 142, having made further gains north, the Romans built a second defensive line called the Antonine Wall between the Firth of Forth and the Firth of Clyde. A few decades later, however, this second wall was abandoned with the Empire drawing its frontier back south to Hadrian's Wall. The findings of this latest study by the University of Edinburgh, Historic Environment Scotland and the Scottish Universities Environmental Research Centre have been published in the journal, Antiquity. The study is part of a wider project called Beyond Walls, which is seeking to shed light on ancient sites, stretching from Durham in the south to the fringes of the Scottish Highlands in the north.

Study sheds light on life beyond Rome's frontier

Archaeologists from Edinburgh have discovered more than 100 Iron Age settlements in south-west Scotland that date from the time of Roman occupation. The team has been surveying an area north of Hadrian's Wall to better understand the impact of Rome's rule on the lives of indigenous people. Researchers explored nearly 600 square miles around Burnswark hillfort, Dumfries-shire, where Roman legions campaigned as the Empire expanded northwards. Previous archaeological research in terrain between Hadrian's Wall and the Empire's more northerly frontier at the Antonine Wall had focused predominantly on the Roman perspective. It had concentrated on the camp, forts, roads and walls that the Rome's empire built to control northern Britain – rather than sites associated with native tribes.

Immense firepower

The new study initially focused specifically on Burnswark – home to the greatest concentration of Roman projectiles ever found in Britain, and a testament to the firepower of Rome's legions. The research team went on to scour an area of 580 square miles beyond the hillfort, using the latest laser-scanning technology. Although much of the area had been studied before, researchers found 134 previously unrecorded Iron Age settlements — bringing the total number known in the region to more than 700. The survey's discovery of so many small farmsteads is a significant finding, researchers say. Such settlements offer key insights into how the majority of the indigenous population would have lived. Analysis showed sites were dispersed evenly across the landscape — with dense clusters in some places — suggesting a highly organised settlement pattern, researchers say.

Empire's edge

Work on Hadrian's Wall began in AD 122 and, for two decades, the defensive fortification between the Solway Firth and the River Tyne marked the northernmost

Northernmost frontier

Study author Dr Manuel Fernández-Götz, of the University's School of History, Classics and Archaeology, said: "This is one of the most exciting regions of the Roman Empire, as it represented its northernmost frontier. The land we now know as Scotland was one of very few areas in Western Europe over which the Roman army never managed to establish full control".

Fellow author Dr Dave Cowley of Historic Environment Scotland said: "The discovery of so many previously unknown sites helps us to reconstruct settlement patterns. Individually, they are very much routine, but cumulatively they help us understand the landscape within which the indigenous population lived."

Go online to explore Orkney's historic cathedral

Did you know you can take a virtual tour of St Magnus Cathedral? St Magnus Cathedral, started in 1137, is of international significance. Built from local red and yellow sandstone, the cathedral is mostly Romanesque in style. It is dedicated to St Magnus, Earl of Orkney in the 12th century, at a time when Orkney was part of the Kingdom of Norway. He was killed on the orders of his cousin and rival Hakon, and many miracles were reported after this death.

In 1137 Magnus's nephew Rognvald began construction of the 'fine minster' in honour of his saintly uncle; Magnus's relics remain interred in the pillars of the choir. The cathedral has stood firm against Reformers, Cromwellian troops and wartime danger, and is the most complete medieval cathedral in Scotland.

Remarkable history

But if you'd like to see more see www.orkney.gov.uk/StMagnus for a video tour that will take you to all parts of the building, including the upper levels where the bells and intriguing artifacts like a hangman's ladder can be found. The short videos are an accessible way to explore the Cathedral and discover more about its long and remarkable history.

Glasgow's top walking spots

With so many visitors to Scotland often starting their journey in Glasgow, as international travel resumes, many want to stretch their legs after a long flight. Here are some of the city's great spaces to stretch your legs and take some of the sights across Scotland's largest city.

1-Glasgow Botanic Gardens

The Botanic Gardens is completely free to enter and has lots of space and interesting activities for kids to enjoy; from playing in the park, to exploring the glasshouses which homes giant plants and even some goldfish.

2- Maryhill Walking and Nature Trails

The three different trails through Maryhill are suitable for families and are approximately 1.4 miles long – the perfect spot to explore nature and learn about the local history.

3-Cathkin Braes

Cathkin Braes is an area of hills to the south east of Glasgow – with panoramic views over the city, and has a host of walking routes, woodland, grassland – ideal for walking, picnics and informal recreation.

4-Pollock Park

The perfect spot if you're looking for an adventure – with three mountain bike circuits, 146 hectares of parkland and a variety of woodland walks.

5-Glasgow Green

The oldest park in the city, which is bursting with history and offers something for the whole family to enjoy including play parks, monuments, fountains and walking routes.

6-Glasgow Murals Trails

This walk explores the city by foot and visits 29 impressive artwork creations with some placed on iconic buildings.

7-Kelvingrove Park

The perfect spot in the West End on a sunny day where you can get lost for a couple of hours with nature around every corner.

8-Seven Lochs Wetland Park

Take in the ancient lochs, woodland walks and a wealth of wildlife at the largest urban nature and heritage park in Scotland.

9-Scottish Wildlife Trust Loch Ardingning

The picturesque wildlife haven with areas of wetland, woodland, grassland and moorland is the perfect spot for birdwatching. Two walks around the reserve provide many opportunities to appreciate the wildlife.

10-Queens Park

The park offers a range of sport and recreational facilities along with a boating pond, a smaller nature pond and an adventure playpark.

Peculiar as it may appear, and it makes for an intriguing story, but the existing burgh of Ballater, one of the most prominent inland holiday resorts in Scotland, owes its existence to the Mineral Waters of Pannanich, which can be found within walking distance to the east of what is recognised today as the Capital of Upper Deeside. Nearly two and a half centuries have elapsed since Pannanich Wells first came into prominence, as it was in 1760 that an elderly woman had a dream in which she envisaged nearby curative waters. On relating her vision to others an investigation was eventually arranged and her prophesy was proved correct. It didn't take long for the word to spread and great numbers of people soon flocked to the area.

The few local cottages could in no way provide sufficient accommodation for the hordes of 'patients' who yearned to take the miracle cure and gradually a village sprang up at Ballater to provide board and lodging.

Reel O' Tullich

In 1793 a surgeon proclaimed in the Aberdeen Journal that he intended visiting the Wells every week and would pay due attention to convalescents dispersed in different hamlets for the benefit of the goat's milk.

A writer in 1825 maintained that some patients drank as-much as seven or eight quarts in a morning! But in no way should the quantity taken exceed two Scottish pints. For many years the Wells prospered and were soon honoured by Royalty when, in 1870, Queen Victoria paid a special visit to the thriving spa.

The name Ballater is believed to have emanated from a medieval hamlet by the name of Balader, that existed during the 15th century near to the Church of Tullich at the east end of the Pass of Ballater. The church is extremely old, having originally been dedicated to St Nathalan who lived in the 5th century, and the existing building dates from out 1450 AD.

In fact, it's claimed that the famous Reel of Tullich was conceived within the walls of the kirk on a very cold Sunday in winter, when the minister failed to turn up for the service and the congregation entertained themselves by dancing and swinging each other by the arms in order to keep warm. So, the Highland Dancing world gained the renowned dance that is a regular at every Highland Games programme today!

The Sights of Deeside

Close to Pannanich is Ballaterach, where the eminent Lord Byron stayed as a young boy, and it's alleged he was so often defined as a mischievous 'loon' that and of the residents, including the local wheelwright who closed his workshop and the miller who stopped his wheel, whenever Byron passed by!

At the time when the hills are covered in heather, the forlorn and untamed Dinnet Moor is transformed into a glorious splash of purple crimson stretching as far as the eye can see. In truth, when the heather is in full bloom, Dinnet Moor is one of the top sights of Deeside.

But Dinnet has other claims to fame. Edward I encamped there with his army and in 1335 the Battle of Culblean took place nearby between David II, son of Robert the Bruce, and Baliol. The latter's forces were routed and any cairns in the district are possibly the burial places of those slain.

The actual site of the encounter is on the eastern slope of Culblean, close to Loch Davan. This loch and its sister, Loch Kinord, are beautiful stretches of water and the home to many wild fowl. Historians have found much of interest in the surrounding neighbourhood, including several prehistoric canoes and bronze and iron objects.

Spectacular beauty spots around Ballater

The largest wooded islet is said to have been the site of a castle in the days of Malcolm Canmore, some of these islets being artificial, constructed in the same style as the Crannogs of Ireland and were the homes of lake dwellers in the dim and distant past. Close to Loch Kinard is the "Vat," a cave through which water falls. Gilderoy, a noted freebooter, stayed here from time to time, and must have found it comfortable, for it is claimed he said that of all his retreats the Burn of Vat was the warmest, while the Glens of Cushnie were the coldest.

Dundee based writer Charlie Mill provided stories for the Scottish Banner for many years, touching on Scottish history, lifestyle and some of Scotland's truly unique characters. We recently opened the vault of Charlie's great work to share a collection of some of his favourites with readers today.

South-west of Ballater stands the ruins of Knock Castle, an ancient stronghold which was at one time owned by the famous Durward family and garrisoned to preserve the Royal Authority on Deeside.

The peace and tranquillity of Glen Gairn make it a well-loved spot for those who like to rub shoulders with nature and is indeed a favourite resort of the Royal Family when they are in residence at nearby Balmoral Castle.

At Abergairn are old lead mines, but all attempts to work them proved a financial failure. Some miles up the glen is Rinloan, where once a hostelry plied liquid refreshment to the district, but those days are long gone, and the refreshment today is free the cold, clear water of the hill burns.

Between Balmoral and Ballater stands Abergeldie Castle, where once upon a time its occupants made Birch Wine. It was a celebrated beverage, one writer describing it as being 'superior to the finest champagne'. It was partaken at the funeral of the Laird in 1831 and was actually sold at Birkhall until the year 1845 at the modest sum of one shilling a bottle.

Katie Rankine, a well-known witch in the bad old days, suffered imprisonment in the castle dungeon, but was ultimately burned at the stake on nearby Creag nan Ban.

There are many other spectacular beauty spots around Ballater which the visitor will discover day by day. The legendary Lochnagar (the loch of the goats) lies high in the mountains at an altitude of 2575 feet. Loch Muick (pronounced Mick) too is almost as famous, while the beautiful little church at Crathie is known far and wide.

This year's Glengarry Highland Games will be a special time to recognize the McLennan pioneers of south-east Ontario. In attendance will be the Chief's Commissioner in Canada, Clan Genealogy worldwide Coordinator and many researchers who have been documenting the Pioneers of Glengarry. Farquhar McLennan, a native of Morvich, near Kintail on the west coast of Scotland, arrived in Canada in 1802 and became a prominent businessman in Glengarry. It is understood that Farquhar migrated to Canada on the 1802 voyage of the Neptune.

His grandson "Big Rory" McLennan (1842-1907) was a champion athlete, famous railway contractor, banker and politician. In 1891 and 1892 he was elected the member for Glengarry.

McLennan pioneers of Glengarry

Today there are thousands of descendants of the McLennan pioneers of Glengarry. The Clan MacLennan genealogy Glengarry research group is well advanced with documenting the pioneers in Glengarry and their descendants. Many of the famous Glengarrians are buried at the Williamstown churchyard.

Their research results are available from www.clanmaclennan-worldwide.com/genealogy. Numerous members of the research group will be at the Games this year to meet descendants and connections in the Clans area. On the Thursday the MacLennans will be at the Tartan Ball and on Friday they will host a reception in the Clans barn. For more information about Clan MacLennan see the Clans pages in this issue of the Scottish Banner.
